

From: Clark Baker
Story Headline:
Story URL: http://www.thestreet.com/\_email/story//1/.html
Message:

Hi Adam:

I'm a licensed private investigator. I've conducted thousands of criminal and civil investigations, which began with the LAPD in 1980. I've been investigating pharmaceutical corruption and HIV since May 2008. Before that, I'd never heard of the dispute.

I'm not gay and I'm not HIV+. I'm a commercial pilot, a scuba divemaster and father of adult children. I'm 52 years of old. I'm also an elected Republican official. If I found proof tomorrow that HIV attacks cells and causes AIDS, I would report that proof and move on. Like Duesberg, I don't deny the existence of HIV - but that should not matter. Since neither you nor I have found proof of when, where, how and who proved that HIV attacks cells and causes AIDS, it appears that you've abandoned your journalistic responsibility - which is why I was asked to investigate this in the first place.

As for injecting HIV, Duesberg himself asked to participate in this experiment but your friends refuse to fund this comparatively low-cost experiment as per his proposal. Unlike flu and thousands of other infection based experiments, can you explain why the NIH, CDC and drug companies refuse to engage in this experiment?

A real journalist would investigate and answer these questions. Instead, you and Cramer prove yourselves to be nothing more than charlatan hacks. Too bad you're not a real news agency.